▶ Principles and Development of Bio-Inspired Materials

Ended

Bio-inspired materials are becoming of increasing interest in many fields of practical applications. In contrast to man-made materials natural materials such as wood, bone and shells are composed of only limited number of basic components. They gain their diversity in mechanical properties by hierarchical structuring which allows them to fulfil a variety of functions e.g. self-healing, mechanical stability, high toughness.

Biomedicine and Molecular Biosciences (BMBS)
Forests, their Products and Services (FPS)
Materials, Physics and Nanosciences (MPNS)

30 - 31 March 2010
Rome, Italy

Strategic workshops

► Benefits of Research Infrastructures beyond Science - The Example of the Square Kilometre Array (SKA)

The Square Kilometre Array (SKA) is a $1 billion+ international project to create a radio telescope incorporating a receiving surface of a million square metres, fifty times larger than the biggest receiving surface now in existence.

Individuals, Societies, Cultures and Health (ISCH)
Information and Communication Technologies (ICT)
