Foreign Minister Liimets: journalists are risking their lives to document crimes against humanity in Ukraine

The COST programme is different from many other programmes funded by the European Commission in the sense that COST supports networking - networking in its best sense. Unlike other programmes the aim of COST is to create a network as broad as possible. Another difference is that the membership is individual, not institutional. Therefore, it is possible to expand this network practically endlessly.

Prof. Mart Susi, Professor of Human Rights Law, Tallinn University

COST is not just about research and bridging borders within the field of research. It is also about bringing together research and society, research and arts, research and business - to realise the ideal of research without borders in the broadest sense. COST Actions are also about creative encounters between academic and non-academic worlds. I always recommend to seize the opportunities that COST participation offers: to any researcher, and particularly to the younger ones. In a perfect world, each and every young researcher would have their COST opportunity.

Karin Kello, Department of International Research Cooperation, Estonian Research Council and the COST National Coordinator for Estonia
